What Matters to Marsden - turning our conversations into action

What we did in Marsden

664 people took part in the What matters to Marsden conversations in October 2022, sharing their experiences of what life is like in Marsden – this equates to 17.5% of the population of Marsden. The conversations were led by Marsden Community Trust, Marsden Community Association, with support from different community groups and the Colne Valley ward councillors. To do this they used the Place Standard tool. This is a way of having conversations about any place – it could be your street, neighbourhood or town.

The What matters to Marsden conversations were either one to one, in groups or at workshops. People also took part online. 603 citizens took part, completing 403 Place Standard assessments.

In Winter 2023, 274 people took part in our 'Next steps' activities to discuss the results and prioritise what is important to them.

There will be more opportunities to continue the conversation about how we can make our local place better, ways for you to get involved in the actions and to share ideas and comments.

The aim was to reach out to the local community and involve more people in community activity and planning for future activity in a collaborative way. The engagement will also provide an evidence base to influence future planning, funding and work with partners.

Strengths in Marsden

Key issues: 211 people praised the natural space in Marsden and said it's the best thing about Marsden or is why people live there. 46 people mentioned the natural beauty or scenery that Marsden benefits from, and 92 people said there are lots of natural spaces in easy reach, such as the moors, the canal, the parks and the woods. Other people said how tranquil or calming Marsden can be, that the natural spaces in are well cared for and that volunteers do a good job looking after them. Six people also said that the natural spaces draw visitors to the area.

93 people said active travel options are good, and 56 said it has a wealth of good walking options. Others said that there isn't much for cyclists or horse riders and that signage for routes isn't clear. It is also said that you can access good leaflets, maps or guided walks. 6 people thought that most paths or routes are well maintained, but 4 others complained about wet or 'boggy' footpaths. 2 people complained that paths can be blocked on occasion and 1 thought there aren't enough paths leading to natural spaces. Some people also raised concerns about cycling either damaging walking paths or considered that cycling can cause problems for other path users.

70 people said lots of positive things about the moorland around Marsden. 16 praised the moors specifically and complimented other natural spaces in the area. 2 people praised the maintenance of the moors, and 1 person for the walking options available on the moors. 8 people praised the National Trust and 1 person the community fire watch scheme. However, 3 people said the moors are inaccessible for some people and 26 people are concerned about moorland fires. 48 people really like the canal and rivers in Marsden, 5 people praised Tunnel End. 16 people praised the canal without mentioning any other natural space. 8 people praised the Canal and Rivers Trust, whilst others felt that the canal is too narrow, is overused and inaccessible for some. Disrepair of the canal towpath is also an issue.

7 people said generally positive things about the parks, with 1 specifically praising their maintenance. However, 22 people said that the parks are in a state of disrepair, are misused or can become flooded in wet weather.

47 people said accessibility is an issue. 33 said that Marsden and its natural space in particular isn't accessible for disabled people, whilst others raised specific difficulties or difficult spaces such as parking for the elderly at Tunnel End or the canal towpath. 1 person said that there are some accessible paths in Marsden.

- 7 people suggest improving the canal towpath.
- 7 people suggest installing more seating or picnic benches.
- 7 people suggest more tree planting.

Identity and belonging

Key issues: A significant number of people talked about their feelings toward Marsden's identity and their sense of belonging in the village. 45 people said they feel part of the community or like they belong in Marsden, and 36 people sharing that there is a good, strong sense of community, or saying such things as "I love it here" or it is a "special place and I wouldn't want to move or live anywhere else". 25 people said they feel Marsden has a positive image, and 22 people said they are proud to live here. 54 people said Marsden has a strong or distinctive character and that it's a friendly, welcoming place. The main negative point that people raised is the divide between some people whose families have been based in Marsden for generations and people who have 'recently' moved here - often referred to as the 'locals vs comer-inner divide'. 7 people said the perceived divide itself is damaging to the community. People gave mixed views, split between complaints about people who have moved to Marsden 'changing the village' and complaints about people whose family have lived in Marsden for years making people who have moved here feel unwelcome. 25 other people said that they had moved to Marsden and have always felt very welcome.

144 people said how they feel about Marsden. 31 people praised the range of community events and festivals that take place throughout the year, such as Cuckoo Day, Imbolc, the Jazz Festival and the Christmas Lights switch on as some of the many elements that contribute to a strong community and a sense of belonging. 32 people said the variety and quality of community groups that exist in Marsden is good, with a further 5 people expressing it's easy to get involved in 'things'. 17 people are positive about the amount of history and heritage shared in Marsden. However, there are a noticeable amount of people suggesting the events, activities, groups and heritage in Marsden need to be better promoted, to improve local knowledge of the area and what's on offer. 16 people said Marsden is a place that fosters relationships and connections between residents, with a lot of people all knowing each other and being available to help if needed. Other people said Marsden has a reliance on volunteers to build a sense of community, with some people saying it's often the same people who volunteer their time to organise things for the village. Some people are concerned about diversity in Marsden and how welcome those from non-white backgrounds might feel in the village.

Top suggestions:

- 6 people suggest more overt celebrations and signage of local history are needed.
- 2 people suggest there should be more information about how to get involved or join groups.
- 2 people suggest creating more spaces and things to do for young people.
- 1 person suggests increasing the number of volunteers supporting local activities.

contribution to social contact in Marsden. 7 people said there isn't enough indoor socialising space for young people in the village and two said the library is the only free space in the village. It is also said that the Band Room, Sports Hall and Mechanics could be better used by the community. 49 people mentioned outdoor public spaces, 8 saying the Skate Park is a good place to spend time, 6 praising the walking groups in the village, 6 that the parks are good meeting places, and 5 people said there are generally good outdoor meeting opportunities in Marsden. However, 7 people said there needs to be more sheltered areas (potentially with seating) outside, and 7 more said the parks need improvement to attract more people and that there needs to be more places to meet outside. 1 person said they don't feel like there are any outdoors spaces for adults.

124 people mentioned the different clubs in Marsden, 53 being praise for them and their variety. People said positive things about the youth club, the Scouts, Hanson's Music and the sporting opportunities available in the village. There is also praise for the Marsden Facebook page as a space for advertising what's happening. However, 7 people said there needs to be more things for working adults to do in the evening, and 8 said that Marsden lacks youth activities, a further 6 people said that indoor activities all require you to spend money. Other people said that Marsden needs a safe space for the LGBTQ+ community, a companion's society and that often people are not aware of what is happening in the village.

40 people said they feel included in Marsden and it has a great community, 10 of which said how friendly Marsden is as a place. 17 people said that the many village festivals or events such as Cuckoo Day, the Jazz Festival and Imbolc are great ways to support social contact.

Challenges and issues in Marsden

Traffic and parking

Key issues: 118 people said the main issue is too much traffic and congestion due to on street parking, and the number of cars in the centre affects traffic flow. People also said cars parked on junctions and on double yellow lines can block others in, making it difficult for pedestrians and drivers to get about at busy times. Some people described the parking on Peel Street as turning two lanes into one, causing dangerous bottlenecks which means that buses, and on occasion emergency service vehicles, can struggle to get into Marsden. Some areas of the village are described as hazardous, for example the corner opposite the Railway Pub, corner at bottom end of Peel Street, outside the Co-op and opposite the Mechanics building, because junctions are often blocked or unsighted. It is also said that events and festivals in the village cause gridlock, with drivers taking shortcuts through the village, exacerbating the situation - in particular from Mount Road, Carrs Road, and Stubbin.

23 people said that Brougham Road is difficult, cramped and dangerous for small children, walkers and cyclists at school drop off and pick up for Marsden Infants. Specific issues mentioned are there being no school signs near the school and insufficient space on the road and pavement.

76 people said there are inadequate parking facilities in Marsden. There isn't enough convenient off street parking in the village centre for residents and visitors. Many people said there are various sites which could be used as parking areas if the owners would allow, such as the site of the former Crowther Bruce's mill on Brougham Road. It is also said that the large Old Goods Yard and National Trust carpark is free (at the time of engagement) but underused and that there are no clear parking signs, so it is poorly advertised. It is also recognised that for the disabled and elderly it is a long steep walk up Station Road to the car park. Also, there are only one or two disabled parking spaces in the village, they are always full and lowered pavements are not safe to use.

61 people said there is unsafe and inconsiderate parking, such as pavement parking, blocked driveways or parking on double yellow lines. People complain that some people are not prepared to walk from the designated car parking areas despite being relatively close to the village, and there appears to be semi-regular inconsiderate parking by commuters and visitors. Other issues raised are that cars can park too close to junctions, meaning traffic can struggle to get through or that there is poor visibility for drivers and pedestrians. On street parking makes crossing the road dangerous, especially with young children, prams and for wheelchairs. Some particularly dangerous spots mentioned were Peel Street around the Co-op, Katies Kitchen, next to the library and infant school exit, Brougham Road by St Barts to Clough Lee (emergency vehicles can't get through) and the junction of Church Drive and Clough Lane.

31 people said speeding is an issue, with key problem areas being along Carrs Road and Fall Lane, Station Road and Manchester Road by the junior school. People also said cars don't stop at pedestrian crossings and that local speed cameras don't seem to work. However, the parked cars and Mechanics bottleneck do slow traffic down to a safe speed.

53 people said positive things about adequate parking space and considerate drivers. The Goods Yard was quoted as a great space despite needing work to be an attractive place to park for more people. Others said people park respectfully and safely and that cars usually give priority to pedestrians in the village. It was also noted that parking in Marsden is free (at the time of the engagement).

Top suggestions

- 63 people suggest more public parking and car parks near the centre, utilising sites such as the Crowther Bruce Mill, the land next to the infants school or land across from the New Inn.
- 28 people suggest improving signage for parking to encourage people to use existing car parks more.
- 19 people suggest having pedestrianised areas of the village centre, potentially only at key times.
- 14 people suggest having more double yellow lines and stricter enforcement, sites mentioned were near the Swann Pub, Peel Street and Station Road.
- 12 people suggest having a 20 mph speed limit in and around the centre

Public transport

Key issues: 73 people said why they do not use public transport in Marsden, ranging from issues of reliability, frequency and cleanliness, to statements that the cost for using public transport is too high.

382 people talked about train travel in Marsden, more than anything else to do with travel. 25 people are generally positive about the trains when they run, but 138 said poor accessibility at the train station is a big issue, that it is unusable for wheelchairs, prams and bikes, because of the steep steps leading to the platform. 144 people said the issues are infrequency and unreliability of trains, with cancellations often at short notice. 24 people complained about the high price of using the train, particularly toward Manchester. 7 people complained about the behaviour of people on the Ale Trail, 8 the position of the ticket machine and 4 about the lack of signage and physical timetables.

248 people talked about the bus service. 82 said the bus service in Marsden is okay to good. However, 17 people said the cost for buses is too high and 67 said that the frequency and reliability of buses in Marsden is poor. 13 people complained about the number and quality of bus shelters, and 13 more about the quality of vehicles used.

34 people said positive things about the public transport offer in Marsden, making comparisons with other areas that show the public transport in Marsden in a positive light. 20 people said there is a lack of public toilet facilities on or near the train station and 11 said how important a good public transport offer is to rural communities like Marsden.

Top suggestions

- 12 people suggest increasing the variety of destinations available.
- 10 people suggest improving street lighting around the train station.
- 5 people suggest improving the public transport timetable so that trains and busses are better connected and spaced out.

Work and local economy

Key issues: People said there are a number of key issues, including the type and range of jobs available, commuting and public transport, the closure of the mills, volunteering, working from home and internet connectivity, opportunities for young people and skills and training development. 41 people said they were unable to comment on this theme, either because they were retired or because they worked outside of the area.

79 participants said there is limited or lack of diversity when it comes to employment and career opportunities locally. There are positive comments about the centre, but some feel that it was not thriving or on the up. Lack of variety, limited options for skilled and professional work and meaningful chance of progression is regularly mentioned. 42 people said there are lots of opportunities available in the food preparation sector, in cafes, pubs, restaurants and the retail sector. Whilst this is welcome, it is low paid with limited opportunities.

19 people said there is an active economy overall with a good range of jobs always available, a thriving village with plenty of local businesses offering employment. 57 people mentioned commuting and public transport. The majority of participants felt that there were good transport links, and the village is well connected for people to access work. Lots of people said they commute outside of the area for work and whilst 48 are positive overall about transport links being good, 19 people said the transport links were unreliable, with some opting to drive rather than use the train.

43 people talked about the impact of the mill closures, saying the shortage of premises and the potential and opportunity to develop the mill space to bring new businesses to the area and create much needed jobs. Volunteering is seen as a real asset and strength locally and 16 participants said there are lots of opportunities and roles available at key organisations in the village. Whilst this is viewed as a strength, a few people said what is needed is 'real' jobs and without volunteers there would be a lot less going on.

17 people said they worked from home, either sometimes or the majority of the time, especially since the pandemic. 6 people said there is a need to have better internet speed. 13 people said that opportunities for young people are limited, or low paid and temporary work. 5 people said jobs in cafes, bar work are great for giving young people some work experience.

20 people said they think the range of shops and services in Marsden is good and the high street is active. Community ownership is said to be important in bringing the community together.

13 people said there is a need for adult learning, apprenticeships and more local job search support, as the nearest job centre is 7 miles away in Huddersfield.

Top suggestions:

- 9 people suggest using the space in the Mills for businesses.
- 5 people suggest creating a co-working space in the village.
- 4 people suggest more local authority support for Small to Medium size Enterprise's.
- 3 people suggest increasing the variety of employment opportunities through apprenticeships.

What Matters to Marsden Action Plan

There have been several rounds of citizen engagement. Starting in 2022, followed by re-engagement in 2023 and further engagement opportunities in 2024, such as public meetings and the Marsden Business Owner Survey. Since then, the Marsden Community Trust and the Colne Valley Councillors have worked alongside local residents and community groups to identify the set of actions that make up the following local action plan. Some of the issues raised during the engagement will not fall within the scope of this action plan. However, those issues may be addressed through other engagements or development coming to Marsden in the near future.

The issues, suggestions and ideas raised that fall outside the scope of the community action plan centred around matters such as: accessibility at Marsden Train Station, improving parking and traffic flow in the village (particularly in terms of speeding, problem parking and road safety around local schools), development of the Mill on Brougham Road, improved bus services, accessibility concerns in the village centre, better utilisation of the space at the Old Goods Yard, street lighting and the condition of the Huddersfield Narrow Canal Towpath.

Accessibility at Marsden Train Station is due to be improved as part of the TransPennine Route Upgrade. If you want to speak to anyone about the proposals please consider contacting the Colne Valley Ward Councillors or local rail user group, Slaithwaite and Marsden Action on Rail Transport.

The condition of the Huddersfield Narrow Canal Towpath from Marsden to Slaithwaite is also due to be improved with construction work planned to start in autumn/winter 2024. If you would like to contact someone about this, please consider contacting the Canal and River Trust.

The West Yorkshire Combined Authority have recently closed their consultation on bus reform across the West Yorkshire Area and the West Yorkshire Mayor has taken the decision, informed by the consultation, to take bus services back in to public control. You can find out more about this decision and follow what it might mean for Marsden on the WYCA Bus Reform website.

In March 2023, £5.6 million from the Governments Levelling Up Fund was allocated for the redevelopment of New Mills on Brougham Road, with an additional £11.7 million coming from private development partners to help transform the heart of Marsden, offering new spaces for shops, businesses, and homes. Residents will have the opportunity to comment and share their views on the development plans through the regular planning process and through the coming Marsden Blueprint Engagement. The Marsden Community Trust have also been meeting with the owners of the Mill, and their developers, to share the views of Marsdeners as expressed in What Matters To Marsden.

Further engagement around parking, traffic flow, accessibility in the village centre, The Old Goods Yard and how well lit the streets and spaces in Marsden will be carried out as part of the Marsden Blueprint Consultation. Subsequent works will be dependent on the results of this more detailed engagement, and funding for works would then need to be sought and applied for.

Independently of the Community Action Plan below, The Marsden Community Trust (MCT) has already been successful in increasing the local sense of influence and control through What Matters to Marsden as the engagement was one of the motivating factors in funding the Blueprint Consultation exercise, giving Marsdeners a voice in the changes to come.

The issues that can be addressed through community action are identified in the Action Plan below. The projects detailed to address these issues have been ‘crowdsourced’ throughout the engagement process (2022 to present) and during the ‘Community Action Planning Workshop’ on the 13th February 2024, which was widely publicised across the village and held in the Marsden Mechanics Main Hall.

The Marsden Community Action Plan detailed below is an aspirational plan that details some of the things the Marsden Community want to achieve, as well as some of the things that have been achieved already. The hope is that the whole community will feel invited to take part in any and all of the actions expressed below. Please see the ‘Updates’ column to see how to find out more or how you can get involved.
